Delta Gamma's second annual "lake cakes for the kids" was held on Friday, Feb. 8. The event included serving pancakes from midnight until 4 a.m. for a presale price of $5 and $7 at the door. Anyone and everyone were welcome to come and all of the proceeds went towards Dance Marathon at the University of Florida, Shands Hospital for Children and the Children's Miracle Network.

All of the girls helped with ticket sales before and during the event. Some stayed at the main entrance to guide people to the ticket booth and dining area, and others stayed behind the counter to help serve the pancakes to guests.

“It was really easy to manage, and I had fun helping raise money for kids and doing something fun in a positive way,” said Delta Gamma sophomore Ryan Evans.

Some people came from hitting the bars at Midtown, as all you can eat pancakes for $5 can be a better deal than Relish or Munchies 420.

“This was definitely better than drunk eating in Midtown. I would much rather have a hot breakfast than eat a greasy burger,” said Phi Delta Theta sophomore Adesh Preshad.

This year, the food and tables were set up outside of the house in the parking lot area, which gave more space than the dining room where the event was held last year. Tables, chairs and lights were set up outside along with the buffet table, so guests didn’t have to worry about fitting into the dining room and could stay and mingle as long as they pleased.

“Things were much more organized this year, considering last year was the first time we had ever had Late Cakes,” said Delta Gamma sophomore Kate Snyder.

Overall, the improvement of the event in just one year has been a main goal for Delta Gamma. “Last year was our first year, so we learned from the experience and had it more organized and set up more efficiently. The turn out was about the same, if not more, but the process itself just went much more smoothly!” said sophomore Delta Gamma Brennan Batten.

The success of Late Cakes was also due to all of the members that showed up to eat pancakes and support a good cause. “I was really pleasantly surprised to see so many people show up, especially girls from other sororities that came to support,” said Evans.
